SNAP BEANS

DID YOU KNOW?

Green beans, pole beans, & wax beans are all considered to be snap beans.

Snap beans were once called “string beans” due to the strings running down the sides.

Listen carefully to hear the “snap” when you remove the ends, then you’ll know how they got their name!

Scientific developments have bred the string out of the bean.

Unlike other beans, you can eat the pod and seeds of the snap bean.

SNAP BEANS
FRESH AND HEALTHY

Don’t you wish you could snap your fingers and have dinner ready? Add a little “snap” into your meals with garden fresh beans. They are quick and easy to prepare. Adding herbs and spices are a great way to liven up your snap beans. Try basil, garlic, dill, lemon, rosemary, onions or mushrooms for a “snappy” dish.

1/2 cup green pepper, chopped
1 teaspoon margarine
2 medium tomatoes, chopped
1/4 teaspoon basil
1/4 teaspoon pepper

FAST FACTS

SELECTION

Look for fresh, crisp, bright green, firm beans which snap when broken. Beans that are clean, fairly straight, and free from blemishes will be easier to prepare with less waste.

STORAGE

Store fresh beans in the refrigerator in a moisture-proof container or in the vegetable crisper. Use within 1 week.

PREPARATION

Wash in cold water, rinse, and drain. Trim ends by snapping them off or cutting with a knife. Cook beans for as little time as possible; nutrients may be lost if cooked too long.

PRESERVATION

Freezing Green, Snap or Wax Beans:
1. Wash in cold water.
2. Snip & cut into 2 to 4-inch lengths.
3. Water blanch for 3 minutes.
4. Cool promptly, drain, & package, leaving 1/2-inch headspace.
5. Seal & freeze
